I. DEPARTMENT / PROGRAM

Parks, Tourism and Recreation Management

II. SUMMARY OF CHANGE REQUESTED

The proposed graduate certificate provides students and professionals with training and expertise in the key topics related to protected area management. Courses will be taught online in a distance education format and will cover the history and philosophy of the global protected area system, laws and policy, and international conventions. Detailed attention is paid to management planning, managing visitors and tourists, the ecological imperatives of protected areas, sustainability and community-based conservation. Taken together these courses provide the necessary foundation for students to pursue careers in protected area management. Courses are offered via distance learning (online and correspondence) through the College of Forestry and Conservation. The first four courses listed provide the necessary principles and concepts for protected area managers and the final course offers students the opportunity to apply those principles and concepts in a real world context through a combination of field investigation, literature review and the development of an action plan. This course will serve as the capstone for the certificate.

VIII. JUSTIFICATION

Provide enough information that someone without specialized knowledge can make an informed decision.

For several years now, protected area managers from around the world have been calling for increased course offerings and certificate programs that focus on protected area management. The College of Forestry and Conservation, through the International Seminar on Protected Area Management (ISPAM) has partially filled this need. However, there continues to be a call by professionals for a certificate program in protected area management and this proposal seeks to meet the need for more in depth training in a range of topics related to protected areas and their planning and management. These professionals are located all over the world and thus cannot complete such training in person. Therefore, this certificate program is designed to be delivered entirely online via a distance education model. Upon completing the required coursework, students will be prepared for positions managing various protected areas all over the world.
These include both public and private protected areas. In addition, PTRM graduate students enrolled in the MS in Recreation Management would also benefit from being able to obtain this certificate as part of their coursework towards a MS degree at UM. Finally, a graduate certificate in protected area management will improve on-the-ground planning and management of protected areas around the world.
