

Provost's Distinguished Faculty Lecture Spring 2013

Dr. Ashley McKeown

Associate Professor, Department of Anthropology

Skeleton Keys: Unlocking Jamestown's Mysteries with Forensic Osteology and Bioarchaeology

Thursday, February 7th at 6:00 p.m.
University Center Theater (UC 3rd floor)

Informal reception to follow. This event is free and open to the public.

Integrating human skeletal biology and archaeology, Professor McKeown's studies of colonial and prehistoric burials across North America seek to understand life and death in past societies, and her research on early 17th-century burials at Jamestown, Virginia is currently part of a Smithsonian exhibit. Professor McKeown also serves as a forensic anthropologist in Montana, assisting the State Crime Lab and law enforcement with the recovery and analysis of human skeletal remains.
